Notwithstanding the present necessities of the country, the emigration to America is at a very low scale. There are two reasons for this: The war has in a measure emptied France, and even England. partly, of young men, and especially of those belonging to the working classes. The Germans, instead of crossing the sea, find it more advantageous to emigrate to neighboring countries, where their labor is wanted and well remunerated. The other reason is to be found in the American party movement, which the German papers make the best of, in order to divert the stream of emigration from the United States."

A later date gives additional facts of interest : "The price of grain and breat has risen again .-It is now nearly thrice what it was in 1848 and 1849. A bread riot took place a few days ago at Hanaw, in the electorate of Hesse Cassel, one of the first manulacturing places in Germany, and it is thought we shall have more of them. A public rumor has gained some credit that the Commercial Bank of Darmstadt, (in Grand Hesse) and a great banking house here Von Bethmann) have purchased an immense quantity of rape seed on speculation. A great rise in the price of oil has followed. Whether the reason menhoned he true or not, the effect on the public mind is the same. I need not say it is a very bad one."
